What Is a CH Robinson Broker? Freight Services, Load Board, and Login Guide

Call Now +1 (833) 656-9211

The global transportation industry relies on strong relationships between shippers, freight brokers, and trucking companies. Freight brokers play an important role in connecting businesses that need to move goods with carriers that have the equipment and capacity to transport them. One of the most well-known logistics providers in this space is C.H. Robinson, a global company that manages millions of shipments every year.

Through its advanced digital logistics technology such as Navisphere and the carrier-focused platform Navisphere Carrier, the company connects thousands of shippers and carriers across North America. Truck drivers, dispatchers, and transportation companies frequently search for broker-related information to learn how to work with the company and access freight opportunities.

This guide explains how the CH Robinson broker system works, how carriers can find CH Robinson broker loads, and how the company's digital platforms help manage freight operations efficiently.

CH Robinson Broker

A CH Robinson broker acts as a logistics intermediary between companies that need to ship goods and carriers that transport those shipments.

Instead of shippers directly contacting trucking companies, the CH Robinson broker coordinates transportation by finding available carriers, negotiating rates, and arranging shipments.

Freight brokers typically handle tasks such as:

- Matching freight with available trucks
- Negotiating shipping rates
- Managing shipment documentation
- Tracking deliveries
- Communicating with both shippers and carriers

Because of its extensive network, the CH Robinson broker system helps businesses move freight efficiently while providing trucking companies with consistent shipping opportunities.
